On the death of Miss Ada E .-As fades a flower at early dawn, When summer winds are gay-As dies a bird at dewy morn, When warbling its first lay,

She faded-in the morn of life

Just like a dream of Heaven, And now we bow above her grave, And weep for her at even. The winter snow, an icy shroud,

Is o'er her slumber spread, And shrill cold winds with howlings loud, Go wandering o'er the dead. But spring will bring the birds and flowers,

And deck her early tomb, And golden light of sunshine bright, Will drive away the gloom. The stars will watch above her grave, And we who loved her best,

Will linger through the long, long night, Above her place of rest. We know that in the far off sky, Where cares may never roam, She woke, within a palace bright,

And found a peaceful home. G. P. B.

Dickinson College, Pa., February 20, 1860. A QUIET PARLOR INMATE. - Miss Fuller, in a late letter from Europe, mentions having become acquainted with Docter Southwood Smith, the well-known philanthropist, "On visiting him," says the lady, "we saw an object which I had often heard celebrated, and had thought would be revolting, but found on the contrary, an agreeable sight; this is the skeleton of Jeremy Bentham. It was at Bentham's request that the skeleton, dressed versal Knowledge for the people, part 10, now in the same dress that he habitually wore; stuffed out to an exact resemblance of life, The Sons of Malta exposed, being a complete and with a portrait mask in wax, sits there xpose of the secret doings of the I.
